Category: Adobe programs Category: Adobe, there is no consensus regarding the method for drug administration for GBS. Busulfan and FK506 are most commonly used for conditioning prior to unrelated umbilical cord blood transplant \[[@B20]\], but these drugs may cause graft-versus-host disease (GVHD) at the time of transplantation. Cyclosporine can be used instead of FK506, but more data are needed to ascertain the safety of the combination. The frequency of acute GVHD following cord blood transplant ranges from 11% to 80% \[[@B20]\]. GVHD is primarily T cell-mediated and occurs in the gastrointestinal tract, liver, and skin. It is an important cause of morbidity and mortality in cord blood transplantation \[[@B21]\]. While the regimen used in this case appears to have provided enough immunosuppression to reduce the risk of GVHD, the patient has significant hepatitis and severe acute GVHD, which will require treatment. There are many different etiologies of acute hepatitis in children, and while infectious hepatitis is the most common form, non-infectious forms are also not uncommon. Viral hepatitis, autoimmune hepatitis, ischemic hepatitis, drug-induced hepatitis and metabolic and toxic hepatitis, as well as, idiopathic and cryptogenic hepatitis, have all been reported in children \[[@B22],[@B23]\]. Autoimmune hepatitis may present with GVHD, although it is usually mild and self-limited \[[@B24]\]. Idiopathic hepatitis has been reported in children following BMT with a variety of disease conditioning regimens \[[@B25]-[@B27]\]. Chronic liver disease after BMT is common and requires further study. In one study of children with chronic GVHD, late chronic liver disease was found in approximately 15-30% of patients, and it is presumed that chronic GVHD may develop in these children in the absence of prior chronic liver disease \[[@B28]\]. The risk of developing chronic G f678ea9f9e
